The resolution of censure introduced in the legislature against Engrossing Clerk Eads, who was charged with retaining a prostitute as one of his clerks, has fallen flat by the resignation of the alleged "soiled dove," and the kickers have cooled down. It seems the resolution was the work of those who failed to secure positions on Mr. Eads' staff, and as the young lady's character was vulnerable she was made the target for the snafus of those who failed to get seats at the "pic counter." This case is another illustration of the generous kicks administered to those fallen women who try to reform. Whatever her past life may have been, Miss Effie Johnson is now trying to reform, but, like other unfortunates of her class, instead of being aided in her reform life she has been persecuted and made a wanderer from place to place in a heaven-born but vain hope to find some spot where she could live an upright life. She formerly lived in Polk county where her father died about a year ago, leaving her an orphan in charge of her grandmother. Soon after her father's death a notorious woman from Sedalia, in search of victims, becoming impressed with Miss Johnson, coaxed her to visit her at Sedalia, which she did soon after. She was in the woman's house three days before she discovered the nature of the place, when her clothes were taken away from her and she was forced to yield. A few days later she escaped and went to Marshall, Mo., where she secured a position as book-keeper with a prominent firm. During the Christmas holidays a good Sedalian, while at Marshall, informed her employers of her character, and she was dismissed. She was driven from pillar to post, and back again from post to pillar, until she finally reached Jefferson City, a stranger and penniless. Here she met a friend who recommended her to Mr. Eads and she was placed on the engrossing force. She is 19 years old and unusually pretty. Since her advent in Jefferson City she conducted herself with perfect propriety, and no one could have told from her behavior but that she was the lady she appeared to be.

Truth.

Do men know that there are some women who have actually refused the noblest work of God?

Do men know that if they call a girl an angel they can treat her like an idiot?

Do men know that there is a little cloud on the political horizon no bigger than a woman's hand?

Do men know that vanity is not entirely monopolized by the other sex?

Do men know that dress is the chief end of woman—not man.

Do men know that women do not believe quite all they are told?

Do men know that a woman occasionally tires of pretty nonsense, and pines to be talked to like a rational being?

Do men know that some day they may miss the president's chair by just the vote of the much derided "low woman?"

Do men know that insurance is the bee's business?

Do men know that they should never tell the "bachelor girl" of any new wrinkle of hers?

Do men know that the very "winning ways" of a woman are the ones he criticises when she is won?

Do men know that a woman makes a good friend?

Do men know that it is their adorable strength and decision of character, and not their beauty that woman loves?

Do men know that a woman always wants the last word?

ONE of the most noteworthy farm houses of pioneer days in Johnson county was built of hewn walnut logs from 16 to 40 feet in length, many of them having a face of from 12 to 18 inches. The joints are made of young oaks. The rafters of elm and oak, even the floors of elm and hickory, sawed at the primitive mill and joined by hand.
